During their stay, the Cressmans will observe the country's agricultural practices, including irrigation systems, crop production, and livestock management.

They will also visit rural villages and interact with local farmers, learning about their farming practices and challenges.

The trip will provide an opportunity for the Cressmans to share their experiences with their counterparts in Pakistan and to discuss potential areas for cooperation in agriculture.

The thought of a child struggling to breathe is paralyzing.

For many parents, it's a thought they live with every day. When children are born with incurable lung disease called Cystic Fibrosis, it affects a child's breathing, digestion, and overall health. It's estimated that nearly 70,000 people live with Cystic Fibrosis in the United States, and it's the most commonly inherited genetic disorder among those of Ashkenazi Jewish descent.

Cystic Fibrosis is a genetic condition that affects the body's ability to transport ions and nutrients. This can lead to thick, sticky mucus that can obstruct passages such as the lungs and digestive system. The disease is caused by mutations in the CFTR gene, which is responsible for producing a protein that helps control the flow of salt and water in and out of cells. When the CFTR protein is faulty or missing, the body can't produce enough natural mucus, which can lead to lung infections and other health problems.

One of the most common symptoms of Cystic Fibrosis is difficulty breathing. Children with Cystic Fibrosis may experience frequent chest infections, coughing, and wheezing. They may also have problems with their digestive system, such as constipation, steatorrhea (fatty stools), and malnutrition.

The treatment for Cystic Fibrosis is focused on managing symptoms and preventing complications. This includes regular treatments to help clear mucus from the lungs, diet and nutrition guidance, and medications to treat lung and digestive problems.

The National Cystic Fibrosis Foundation offers resources and support for individuals and families affected by Cystic Fibrosis. They can be found at https://www.cysticfibrosis.org. For more information about Cystic Fibrosis, please visit the Cystic Fibrosis Foundation's website.
Zuover act of 1774

One of the actions leading to the formation of a new nation was the Zuover act of 1774. Passed on December 27, 1774, it was the first act adopted by the Second Continental Congress. In the act, Congress declared that all members of the Congress were "thenceforth to be considered free and independent People. The act was a response to British attempts to control the colonies and was a significant step in the independence movement.

Mississippi

The Zuover act of 1774 was a landmark event in American history, marking the beginning of the road to independence. It served as a catalyst for further actions that would eventually lead to the Declaration of Independence and the establishment of the United States of America.

Redwings battle back to beat Ionia 86-77

By Bob Buxton

After struggling in the first quarter, the Redwings battled back to defeat Ionia 86-77 in a game at Ionia Wednesday evening. The Redwings trailed 24-22 at the end of the first period, but rallied to win 28-28 in the second, 20-21 in the third, and 50-42 in the final period.

Fowler dumps Laingsburg 84-65

Fowler defeated Laingsburg 84-65 Wednesday evening, January 27. Fowler scored 28 points in the first period, while Laingsburg was held to 10 points. Fowler continued to outshoot Laingsburg in the second period, increasing their lead to 59-32.

For Hemlock, the defeat was a short-lived rally. They outscored Stockbridge 21-15 in the third period, but it was too late to stop the league unbeaten record in Ingham County League basketball.

Ovid-Elsie pulled out in front 31-21 in the second period and then powered to victory 71-58 over Hemlock last Friday night, losing to Portland 23-20 in the final period, but it wasn't enough to stop the league unbeaten record in Ingham County League basketball.
