Pianist, 15, headlines Lions variety show bill

Being blind since birth has not prevented 15-year-old Laura Allgaier of Kalamazoo from making his mark. New zone law may be repealed

In order to make the zoning law more applicable to the needs of the community, a new zone law was recently introduced in the St. Johns City Council. The new law is designed to provide more flexibility in the way that zoning is administered and to address some of the concerns that have been raised by residents in the past.

The new zone law eliminates the requirement for a zoning permit for minor alterations to existing structures, such as the addition of a room or the installation of new windows. Instead, the law requires that the homeowner notify the City Clerk's Office of the intended changes, and the City will then review the plans to ensure that they comply with the zoning regulations.

The new law also simplifies the process for obtaining a zoning permit for major alterations, such as the construction of a new building or the conversion of an existing structure into a different type of use. The process has been streamlined, and the fees associated with obtaining a permit have been reduced.

The new zone law is expected to be adopted by the City Council at the next meeting, which is scheduled for March 1st. The public is encouraged to attend the meeting in order to provide input and feedback on the new law.

Meat processors and processors have become less-competitive with each other and with meat processors, according to state University crop scientist Dr. John Franklin. Franklin said that the meat industry is facing challenges, particularly with the increasing cost of production and the need to improve the efficiency of the processing operations. He believes that the meat industry needs to focus on improving its efficiency to remain competitive.

A job well done

Probably no contemporary publication or artistic expression more completely captures the grandeur of the western U.S. than the magazine "Arizona Highways." Of course, the soil-stirring pictures between its covers are the work of a whole stable of artists—including Barry Goldwater, D. B. Cooper, and various brothers who have been ignored and given it a new and more powerful voice.

For members of the State legislature giving it a new and more powerful voice, there were a number of implications. One of which was that the magazine "Arizona Highways," with its focus on art and the outdoors, was a vehicle for promoting tourism and economic development. Another implication was that the magazine had the potential to serve as a unifying force, bringing together people from diverse backgrounds and interests who shared a love for the natural beauty of the West.

The magazine's impact was not limited to its printed pages. It also had a significant influence on the field of journalism, inspiring a new generation of writers and photographers to explore the rich and varied landscapes of the American West. The magazine's success helped to establish a new standard for travel writing and photography, and it remains a source of inspiration for those who continue to explore and write about the West today.

Despite these successes, the magazine faced challenges. The creators of "Arizona Highways" were constantly striving to find new ways to engage readers and continue the magazine's legacy of excellence. They were always working to enhance the content and design of the magazine, always looking for ways to expand its reach and influence.

In the end, the "Arizona Highways" legacy was one of commitment to excellence, dedication to the West, and a commitment to the future. The magazine's creators were always working to ensure that their vision of the West would be passed on to future generations, and they succeeded in creating a enduring legacy that continues to inspire and educate readers today.

The 'generation gap'

By RON HUARD

Many young Americans are divided over the issues of the Vietnam conflict, the credibility gap, the inflation problem, and generally over a series of questions that most of them lead to somewhat opposing opinions.

There is a trend, however, that may indicate that this generation gap is not so deep as it once was. This trend is the increasing influence of the middle-class "baby boomers" in American life, and the resulting decrease in the generational gap.

The middle-class baby boomers, born between 1946 and 1964, constitute a large bloc of the American electorate. They are the children of the post-World War II baby boom, and their numbers are increasing rapidly.

This generation is characterized by a strong sense of achievement, a desire for progress, and a commitment to social justice. They are also more likely to be involved in political activities than their parents were.

As a result, the middle-class baby boomers are having a significant impact on American politics. They are more likely to vote in elections, and they are more likely to support candidates who support their views.

The middle-class baby boomers are also more likely to support programs that benefit the middle class. This is evident in their support for increased spending on education, health care, and housing.

In conclusion, the middle-class baby boomers are having a significant impact on American politics. They are more likely to vote, and they are more likely to support candidates who support their views. This is a trend that is likely to continue in the future.
