What is an intermediate school district?

By Public Schools News Features Writer

What is an intermediate school district and what does it do? Many people drive by the main office building of the Clinton County Intermediate School District without knowing exactly what it does or where it is located.

John Senwartzkopf-intermediate superintendent

Located behind the intermediate school district office is the district office, where the intermediate superintendent, Larry Senwartzkopf, along with 12 staff members, handles much of the paperwork associated with the intermediate school district.

The school psychologist, for instance, works with 500 to 600 students, while the speech and language therapist serves hundreds of students. The district also employs 4 school psychologists, 12 school social workers, and 6 occupational therapists, a physical education teacher, a curriculum resource consultant, a health/physical education teacher, speech and language therapists, special education teachers, and school social workers.

The intermediate school district serves all 600 local school districts throughout the state, which are divided into thousands of schools in the Clinton County area.

In 1962, the former county intermediate school district was formed when the county superintendent of education became the director of the special education program for the State Department of Education. In 1963, the intermediate school district was formed to handle the tasks of the former county intermediate school district, which included providing educational services for the handicapped and the mentally handicapped.

The intermediate school district also employs a school social worker, a physical education teacher, a curriculum resource consultant, a health/physical education teacher, speech and language therapists, special education teachers, and school social workers.

The students were educated as to the importance of proper nutrition, appropriate physical activity, and the importance of dental care. The children were encouraged to practice good hygiene habits and were given the tools to do so. The program was a success, and the students showed a marked improvement in their understanding of personal and community hygiene.

Details hazy on Fort Henry action during Revolution in Old Northwest

RHODESVILLE, W Va., April 17, 1976

There is agreement that the women kept so in their way of a, heavy body, half of which we have any record. Because of the nature of the problem, there is a lack of detailed information about the individuals involved.

Several historians have described the actions of the women, noting their courage and determination. However, the records are incomplete and the stories often contain inaccuracies.

The women, known as the Rhodestown heroines, are said to have acted during a crucial moment of the Revolutionary War. Their actions may have played a significant role in the outcome of the conflict.

The women were reportedly stationed in a fort, where they faced armed forces. They are said to have defended the fort with determination and valor.

The women's actions are often described as a testament to the strength and resilience of women during a time of great upheaval.

There are varying accounts of the women's actions, with some stories suggesting they were able to repel the armed forces and others indicating a different outcome.

The lack of detailed information about the women's actions highlights the challenges in determining the full extent of their contributions.

The Rhodestown heroines are often remembered as a symbol of the strength and determination of women during a time of conflict.

Elusive

Sunday is a special day, a beautiful family day. It is the world’s best day for a reunion. Even with the world’s problems, people still like to go out and see each other. And yet there are still people who are lonely and need someone to talk to. Elsie is such a beautiful town.

Elusive is small, but it has a big heart. The people are all so friendly and helpful. The kids of today are a great group of people. They try to preserve Elsie. Even though it’s small it keeps in touch with the outside world.

Report from the Capitol

The 1976 Michigan General Assembly completed its first session on March 22, 1976. The 1976 session will probably be the most controversial in recent memory. Our state budget for this year was reported out of the House Appropriations Committee last week and is now before the full House for consideration. The bill to increase the state budget for this year by $106 million, approximately $60 million of which would come from a tax increase, was reported out of the House Appropriations Committee last week and is now before the full House for consideration.
