The RFD men — rural people directory on legs

If you’re looking for someone who knows everybody—and do know EVERYBODY—is a certain section of the town, turn to the rural mail carrier.

“They know the name of every person, old and young,” said St. John’s Postmaster Keith Witt. “It’s true, even the center of Quincy has a mailman. City carriers have the same knowledge about the people living in trees.”

The carriers are marvelously efficient, especially those on the isolated rural routes. “The mailman can save Dr. John Fox, and St. Johns, with 1,000 subdivisions, is an efficient service.”

But don’t be fooled by the rural mail carriers, they are just like you and me. They know the name of every person living in the county and how to find them. In fact, on the St. Johns rural routes, there are 1,014 families, and if you don’t have the carrier’s name, you can see that’s a lot of people to keep track of.

Doll collection shown at Literary Club

BEGINNING with the dolls in different costumes, Mrs. R. D. Boll had the first display in a series of volunteer socials when she presented dolls Thursday evening at the Palisades Chapel of the Methodist Church for the annual Mother’s Day party.

Among the dolls were treasures. Mrs. R. D. Boll had a doll that had belonged to her own mother, and a new doll that was a gift from the Methodist women at the church. The dolls were made by local artists and were displayed in a large case at the rear of the church.

There were some interesting dolls, including dolls dressed in period costumes and others in modern dress. The dolls were arranged in a display case that was set up in the entrance hall of the church.

Perhaps too often, we have to settle for something less, when we should give something to the gift-giving public.

We do not think of giving gifts as we think of them. We do not think of giving gifts as we think of them.

in all their beauty and color, we were transported to the Hawaiian Islands by pictures shown in the high school auditorium Monday evening. The pictures were taken by Mr. and Mrs. Harold Hehrer, who were married on Christmas Day in Hawaii. The couple was married in the church, and the ceremony was performed by Rev. W. N. Hufnagel.

Many students were interested in the pictures and the story of the trip, and they were impressed by the beauty of the islands. The group was entertained by Mrs. Harold Hehrer, who spoke about the trip and the island of Hawaii.

An old man in Australia holds his Bible with shaking hands. Painfully, his finger follows along a well-worn passage. In a village in Guatemala an Indian lad reads joyfully from a New Testament written in elementary Spanish. In a rural area of Japan a Kyoto youth group discusses the Scriptures using Bibles printed in their mother tongue.

God’s Word for a New Age

The Church for All — All for the Church
The Church is a world in and of itself. It is an institution of profound value and great importance. It is a place where people can gather. This is the focus of this issue. The Church provides a place where people can come together and worship. It is a place of fellowship and community. It is a place where people can find comfort and support. It is a place where people can learn and grow.

In our space age of confusion and change, the Bible remains constant. Read and study the Bible faithfully and attend church regularly. Hear there the word of God — His greatest gift, freely given.

I-H Fair
stirred interest
Mrs. Adele Crossen was among the first to arrive at the I-H Fair in Greenbush last Saturday to participate in the horticultural feature that was in progress at the St. John's Church.

On Saturday evening, Mrs. Jones held up her banner and led the fairgoers in a game of " Yankee Doodle." The children enthusiastically joined in the fun.

Mrs. Jones had several irrigation fans and some of her local paper on the exhibit area where they showed various tools and equipment used in irrigation and horticulture. She explained the benefits of using irrigation as opposed to manual watering methods.

In addition, she demonstrated how the irrigation system works and how it can be used to enhance plant growth. The visitors were impressed by the effectiveness of the system and the ease of use.

Mrs. Jones also shared some tips on choosing the right irrigation system for different crops and soil conditions. She emphasized the importance of proper irrigation practices in maintaining healthy plants and maximizing yields.

One of the highlights of the fair was a competition for the best irrigation setup. Several contestants showcased their systems, and the crowd was captivated by the creativity and ingenuity of the entries.

The fair also featured demonstrations of new irrigation technologies and equipment, providing visitors with an opportunity to learn about the latest advancements in the field.

In conclusion, the I-H Fair was a success in terms of meeting its educational objectives and promoting the importance of irrigation in agriculture. The event attracted a large number of visitors, who were both interested and engaged by the various displays and demonstrations.

More farmers like cornage.

Cornage is a coined name for high-moisture corn. It is gaining favor among farmers as a means of holding and storing corn. Most feed mills like cornage better than cornlage. It is similar to cornlage in all respects but one: it is held at a higher moisture level.

The main difference is handled in this manner: cornage contains 16 to 18% moisture, while cornlage contains 12 to 14% moisture.

More farmers like cornage because it permits the farmer to store corn at a moisture level that is considered to be optimal for feeding purposes. This level of moisture is 16 to 18%, which is the recommended range for feeding corn to livestock.

The major advantage of cornage over cornlage is that it can be stored for a longer period of time without the risk of spoilage. This is because the high moisture content slows down the growth of mold and other spoilage agents.

Another advantage of cornage is that it can be used as a feed source for a variety of livestock, including cattle, swine, and poultry. This is because the high moisture content makes it easier to grind and mix with other feed ingredients.

In addition, cornage is often sold at a higher price than cornlage, which can be a significant advantage for farmers who are looking to increase their income from their corn crops.

Animal training, intelligence displayed.

An outstanding display of animal training and intelligence was given when the Aroose and Chamber of Commerce entertained the Miles Brothers 3-ring circus to St. Johns for two performances on Thursday, May 26. This group of camels, llamas and ponies, trained and presented by Paul Nelson, is one of the featured acts. Others will include dancing and high-jumping horses, acrobats and acrobatics; clowns, . . . and the all-time favorites, the performing elephants, plus many more. The circus is being presented to help raise money for the community groups.

The traffic safety barrier

The traffic headline which announces the loss of a traffic safety barrier may make us constantly aware of the senselessness of war. The only consolation—indeed, the only condition under which this flight in a steaming far-away land is blessed—is that the name of freedom and democracy.

But there are other tragic headlines, too. Many, in fact. And we must manage to turn away from them without compensation. These are the headlines dealing with the loss of life and limbs on our nation's roadways.

Yet when we use these editorial columns to appeal for the public attention, we are bound to be considered impertinent. The very calling of attention to this subject may serve to emphasize the vague in a nation where the number of fatalities is larger than it has ever been before, and where the number of accident cases is larger than it has ever been before.
Hopper.
