Financial future

Last week we reminded you of this problem, the challenge facing the state's financial officials of the coming month in an effort to correlate expenses and determine where our money goes.

Now isn't a time to look at past and try to discover how much money was spent on this or that, because any expenditure we now expect to receive was discussed and weighed months or years ago.

Our present problem is to reconcile the actual results of all state-raised revenue with the forecast that was made when we talked about the forthcoming fiscal year.

This is to be sure an academic exercise, because the forecast for 1970-71 already has been revised to remove some $1,974,400,000. That's almost 2 million dollars.

The Governor's budget proposal presented by Governor Milliken. The proposal includes no major change in financing education next year (By general fund I mean the budget of the General Fund Budget. It's one of the most sensitive areas among the taxpayers, because the standards for acceptable performance are not always as high as they should be.

Our uncle, Vere Ferguson, was a bit of a fanatic. We've always known that he had a love for hunting, fishing and getting along with people. When we were young, Vere taught us how to hunt, fish and get along with people. He was a fine hunter, fisherman and outdoorsman.

Tips to new Clinton grads from 'old pros'

EAST LANSING—Around the corner from the bloodbath last month, where the Fightin’ Hellcats defeated the Rice Owls of Texas on a 52-7 score, the Michigan State University students are a little bit more mellow today. Many have celebrated the word's introduction to a new era of sex and suds, but those who still have it are not so busily engaged as those who have been around longer. The latter are more likely to be looking forward to the end of the academic term. The former are beginning to realize that they have not been quite as wild as they thought.

But the students are not the only ones who have been affected. The town, too, has undergone a change. The bars are now open, and the streets are filled with people. The streets themselves are beginning to look a little more worn.

By LLOYD B. CAMPBELL

"No-till" of corn is a conservation practice or farming—by the district watershed. In the summer, George Parsons of the district implemented his "no-till" system. The old corn will be used as mulch and other plant materials serving as soil conditioners. The old corn and other plant materials make the land more productive to control sediment.

The answer to the vital question: "What are the people really losing?" is a matter of how you look at it.

An increasing number of helplessly unemployed entrepreneurs who are in trouble in the community because they believe that the "poor" are the reason for their own failure are increasing in number. As increasing numbers of people are pushed into the streets, the idea of increasing the list of the poor is quickly spreading. As a result, the number of the poor is increasing. As a result, the number of the poor is increasing.

The people of the 46th District think this process tends toward the opposite end of the scale, more of the poor are focusing on the problems of the upper class. As a result, the idea of increasing the list of the poor is spreading. As a result, the number of the poor is increasing.
