Newspaper Week

Newspaper Week, October 7-13, will be met with its share of "So-whats." The real reason for the taste of freedom, it will be a time to pay tribute to one of the most important founders of free expression.

A newspaper's talents and responsibilities are many: It is a community soapbox, companion and entertainer on lonely evenings, bearer of both good and bad news. It is the local and international scene, advertiser of needed goods and services and governmental watchdog. Every day the thunder of the nation's press may be heard throughout the land as a free people let their voices be heard. So it has been for 250 years. Can any other country make the same claim? The answer, of course, is "No," for an alert, articulate press is the dictator's nightmare. It is our local and international scenes, advertiser of needed goods and services and a governmental watchdog. Every day the press testifies as to the standards of our workers, producers, consumers and citizens.

Perhaps the editors and their staffs may be forgiven if they brag a little during their own special week. The newspaper is a major part of a vast, independent information network that is a main pillar in the temple of human freedom as we know it in the United States.
